What a place to trick-or-treat

Compiler of online trick-or-treating best-of list hails Toronto experience ◗ Wants to create ranking of best Toronto neighbourhood for Halloween candy gathering

Even while he was ranking the best U.S. cities to trick-or-treat in, Richard Florida was thinking how "very special" Toronto is, compared with them.

The urban theorist who now makes Toronto his home compiled his list for the online site The Daily Beast, creating rankings based on number of children, ability to walk around safely, level of income ("You get a better haul of candy") and a "bohemian" index ("better costumes").

"It's a very special thing that parents and children feel safe. We should not take (it) for granted."
RICHARD FLORIDA, ON HALLOWEEN IN TORONTO

Top of the U.S. list is Stamford-Bridgeport in Connecticut.

Still, he says, Toronto is the only place that still does Halloween the way it's supposed to be done: "toddlers to tweens, with a mosaic of races that make up Toronto."

Vandals with a vengeance?

Investigators don't know if cases of brake line cuts are linked Area residents canvassed as officers search for clues and possible motives

ALLISON CROSS/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Edward Cartier examines the brake line on his GMC Jimmy, which he realized had been cut.

Several residents had brake lines cut this week while their cars were parked on Bellefair Avenue in The Beach.

Edward Cartier was driving to work Monday morning when he realized his truck brakes weren't working. The postal worker managed to pump his brakes and stop his GMC Jimmy before barrelling into traffic on Queen Street East. Cartier also had the brake line cut on his other vehicle, a Dodge van.

Police have been warning motorists to check their parked cars after brake lines were cut either Monday or Tuesday on six vehicles on Bellefair and two vehicles belonging to the same family in the Granby and Church streets area of downtown Toronto. On Sunday, a vehicle parked on Bathurst Street, south of Dupont Street, also had its brake line damaged.

TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Some cases

Officers distributed leaflets Wednesday on Bellefair that warned motorists to check their vehicles

- Joe Rizza's wife took the family minivan out Wednesday and realized she couldn't stop the car. Their 12-year-daughter was in the van with her. "They went straight through a stop sign and had to put on the hand brake."
- Another man who lives on Bellefair said his car had also been tampered with, but declined to discuss it.
- Const. Wendy Drummond said a similar case of cut brake lines was reported in the west part of the city in spring 2009. Police don't know if that case is related. Those cars were damaged over a period of days. No arrests were made.

Steeles off worst road top spot at last

It took $15 million to get Steeles Avenue off the top of the Canadian Automobile Association's list of worst roads in Ontario, where it had been for two years.

Eight other Toronto roads remain on the list released Thursday, including Steeles but now ranked 11th.

The good news? Seven Toronto roads are on the CAA's best list, making its debut this year.

The poll, by online and paper ballots, attracted 7,000 votes this time, its seventh year. Steeles has been on the Worst Roads list every year.

Federal infrastructure money resurfaced Steeles Avenue, from Yonge Street, to Markham Road, which is now the Best Road in Ontario.

'I did nothing wrong,' argues deported woman

Carla Campana lives in Chile with her brother, who was deported after pleading guilty to aggravated assault

A Toronto woman who claims her only links to gang life are baking cupcakes and giving a baby a teddy bear, says she is innocent and wants to return to Canada.

Carla Campana, who had been in Canada since she was five months old, was deported to Chile last month. The 24-year-old landed immigrant was never criminally charged.

"I did nothing wrong. So I feel it was unfair for me to be deported," Campana said in an interview from Vina del Mar, about 140 kilometres northwest of Santiago.

"I hope Canada sees that they sent an innocent young woman to a country that's basically not mine anymore. Canada is my country," she said.

In July, an Immigration and Refugee Board adjudicator found Campana was a member of a criminal organization — the Almighty Latin Kings and Queens Nation gang. A deportation order was issued.

A judge ruled that the woman would not suffer any irreparable harm if she was deported, but left the door open for her to return to Canada upon judicial review.

"They're accusing me of being part of a Spanish group gang," she said.

"I didn't know it was a gang. I thought it was an organization to help Latino people grow stronger."

Her lawyer, Jeffry House, has said Campana was a "probationary" member and left after being told her role was to "sexually service" the men in the group. The case is ongoing in Federal Court, and House has said he hopes to take it to Immigration Minister Jason Kenney. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Unconditional apology ends furor over tweet

The tangled tale of the twisted tweet finally came to an end at the Ontario legislature Thursday with a straightforward apology from a rookie cabinet minister.

Innovation Minister Glen Murray again said he was sorry for a tweet that called Prime Minister Stephen Harper, Ontario PC Leader Tim Hudak and Toronto mayor-elect Rob Ford bigots.

This time Murray did not add any qualifiers that suggested, as he did in his previous two days of mea culpas, that Conservatives are anti-gay.

"Sometimes we do things that are regrettable," Murray told the legislature.

"I have apologized over the last two days in every way I can imagine, unqualified. I regret my remarks. I'm not sure how many other ways I can apologize."

CHRIS YOUNG/THE CANADIAN PRESS

▶ Innovation Minister Glen Murray

That's all the Opposition was looking for, said Hudak.

The openly gay Murray, who was promoted to the Ontario cabinet just two months ago, sent the tweet calling the three high-profile conservatives bigots after becoming enraged over homophobic tactics that surfaced in the last days of the Toronto mayoral race.

What so angered Hudak, after the initial tweet, was a line in Murray's first apology that suggested there were anti-gay bigots in the Ontario PC Party. THE CANADIAN PRESS

"I thought the minister finally on the third day did apologize, and I do accept that. I objected very strongly because they were baseless and outrageous accusations that were way over the line."
ONTARIO PC LEADER TIM HUDAK

Airport link letter worries homeowners

Transportation Minister Kathleen Wynne tried Thursday to reassure Toronto residents who fear their homes will be expropriated to build a railway link to Pearson International Airport.

About nine residents received letters from Metrolinx, saying their homes in the city's west end would need to be "acquired" and they would be contacted shortly to discuss the process.

Wynne acknowledged some residents in the area will be forced to leave. But others will have the option of staying while the planned rail tunnel is being built under their homes, she said. THE CANADIAN PRESS

MPP not keen on new phone book format

A member of the Ontario legislature is suggesting new residential phone books be recycled to protest their new format.

Progressive Conservative Bill Murdoch says that would hopefully send a message to Bell Canada.

Murdoch, who represents Bruce Grey Owen Sound, says residential listings are now lumped together instead of being separated by individual communities.

He says he's still using his old phone book to look up local numbers.

Murdoch says others who don't like the new books can drop them off at his constituency office by Friday. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Man charged in '80s sex assault case

A man from Trenton, Ont., has been committed to stand trial on sexual assault charges for incidents alleged to have taken place in Oshawa in the 1980s.

Police say the accused and the alleged victim were known to each other.

Investigators allege the abuse took place over several years in the mid-1980s until the alleged victim was about 13.

Fifty-five-year-old James Wallington is charged with indecent assault on a male as well as sexual assault.

He is due in an Oshawa court Nov. 10 to set a date for a pretrial hearing. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Inmate charged in decades-old murders

New evidence led to charges in sex workers' deaths Police: 'We've managed to come up with an extra piece that we needed to charge him'

THE CANADIAN PRESS

▶ Peter Dale MacDonald

▶ Darlene MacNeill

▶ Virginia Coote

A man already serving a life sentence for murder and facing charges in another slaying was charged Thursday with the alleged serial killings of three prostitutes in Toronto more than a decade ago.

Peter MacDonald, 52, has been charged with three counts of first-degree murder in the deaths of the women. They were all found in Lake Ontario near Sunnyside Beach and all three had been strangled.

In Toronto, the body of Julianne Middleton, 23, was found on July 7, 1994 and the body of Virginia Coote, 33, was found just months later on Oct. 28, 1994. The body of Darlene MacNeill, 35, was found on Oct. 29, 1997.

MacDonald was on the radar of Toronto police back in 1994, said Det.-Sgt. Steve Ryan.

Officers had spoken to other sex-trade workers they have talked to in the course of the investigation about the charges, Ryan added.

"They are very happy with the outcome," he said.

MacDonald is serving a life sentence in Kingston Penitentiary for the second-degree murder of James Campbell in Toronto in 2000.

The native of Prince Edward Island was also charged in January with second-degree murder in the death of Michelle Charette, whose body was found in a field in Windsor, Ont., in 2000. There is no information to indicate Charette was a sex-trade worker like the women in Toronto, said Windsor police.

Like Thursday's charges in Toronto, Corey pointed to new evidence as the reason police were able to charge MacDonald this year in Charette's death.

CANADIANS ARE SEEING DOUBLE

We almost never got it, and now we can't get enough. KFC's controversial Double Down — a bunless fast-food creation that squeezes bacon, processed cheese and "the Colonel's savoury secret sauce" between two slabs of fried chicken — has become the company's most successful new menu item of all time in Canada.

Though it has been in Canada for less than two weeks, the company says by Sunday they will have sold more than 350,000 Double Downs across the country.

KFC Canada originally refused to sell the sandwich until it was first tested in the U.S. market.

When it debuted there in April, it quickly became the most successful "sandwich" in KFC's history, selling more than 10 million in the first month.

Despite its success, the Double Down remains a limited time offer, and will only be on menus until Nov. 14.

'I'm really, really sorry': Omar Khadr

Victim's widow had told Khadr, 'You will forever be a murderer in my eyes, it doesn't matter what you say.'

Convicted Toronto-born war criminal Omar Khadr stood in a Guantanamo Bay courtroom Thursday and apologized directly to the widow of the American soldier he killed eight years ago.

Taking the stand to deliver an unsworn statement, Khadr also said his greatest wish was to get out of prison and one day become a doctor.

"I'm really, really sorry for the pain I caused you and your family," Khadr told Tabitha Speer, who hours earlier branded him a murderer.

"Love, forgiveness are more constructive (than anger) and bring people together."
OMAR KHADR

"I wish I could do something that would take this pain away from you."

Speer initially shook her head as he spoke, and then wept.

Khadr told his Pentagon-appointed lawyer, Col. Jon Jackson, that he had decided to plead guilty to war crimes "to take responsibility for the acts I've done."

He outlined the injuries he had suffered in the firefight that led to the death of Sgt. 1st Class Chris Speer, a U.S. special forces medic.

Khadr, 24, said he wanted to pursue his education and forge "true relationships," something he said he had never experienced.

"That's my biggest dream and biggest wish: To get out of this place."

OAKVILLE HOSPITAL

Developer donates $10 million

Developer Peter Gilgan's wallet is $10 million lighter today and officials of Oakville's planned new hospital couldn't be happier.

The donation is a shot in the arm to the hospital foundation's campaign to raise $60 million to equip the hospital when it's finished in 2015.

Construction is expected to begin in June.

On a blustery, sun-splashed day, about 100 people crammed into a tent on the barren hospital site at Dundas Street West and Third Line Thursday to mark the gift, the largest ever given to an Oakville organization.

"I just think the community really needs this hospital," Gilgan, a father of eight and grandfather of two, told the Toronto Star. The Oakville resident is founder and CEO of Mattamy homes.

"Part of a growing community is its need for health care and education and all sorts of things," he explained.

"The hospital here now is from the '50s, it's out of date and needs renewal."

John Oliver, president and CEO of Halton Healthcare Services, said Gilgan's donation "has set a new benchmark for philanthropy in our community — one that will undoubtedly inspire others."

For $10 million, Gilgan received a stethoscope from the foundation, something his tiny granddaughter Sophie played with during the ceremony. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Jewish leader fighting sex offender status

- Surkis expresses remorse in child pornography case
- Crown wants his sentence to send a clear message

ANDY BLATCHFORD/THE CANADIAN PRESS

▶ Bill Surkis

A former Quebec director of B'nai Brith said Thursday he's deeply sorry for downloading child pornography and recognizes the impact his actions have had on his family.

Bill Surkis expressed remorse during his sentencing hearing in Montreal.

The former Jewish community leader, who pleaded guilty in May to one count each of accessing and possessing child pornography, will be sentenced Dec. 9.

But the Crown wants to send a clear message to the public that downloading and possessing child pornography only serves to fund an industry that profits from exploiting young children.

To that end, they want to have Surkis, 71, declared a registered sex offender, which is a sticking point in the sentencing.

The Crown and defence have agreed that Surkis should receive the minimum sentence allowed by law — a 45-day jail term, to be served on weekends. There would be 240 hours of community service and three years probation.

The Crown's request that Surkis be registered as a sex offender and have his DNA taken has been dismissed by Surkis and his lawyer as unnecessary and punitive.

"That would put me in a position where I would not be able to serve my community," Surkis said. "I downloaded videos, yes, but I am not a sex offender."

Pioneer of India's hippie scene dies at 85

'Eight Finger Eddie' helped put Indian hotspot of Goa on the map Like other places, counterculture paradise soon became top-dollar tourist destination

Eight Finger Eddie's time had come and gone.

When the 85-year-old, touted as the godfather of Goa's hippie scene, died last week in a beachside village in Goa, the Indian state he had helped put on the travel map for global backpackers and stoners had long since turned its back on him and his kind.

Goa is now a top vacation and party destination, thronged by tourists hungry for its high-end hotels and chilled-out beaches. Along with the tourism has come wealth, helping Goa to become one of India's wealthiest states in terms of per capita income.

It was a different scene at Anjuna beach, now the epicenter of tourism in Goa, when Eddie arrived with his half-naked buddies, Junky Robert, Hollywood Peter and Trumpet Steve in 1965.

The details of how and why Eddie arrived in India in his 30s are not clear. He was born Yertward Mazmanian in the U.S. in 1924 with just three fingers on one hand, helping him earn the nickname "Eight Finger Eddie" in the village of Anjuna, along with his other nickname, "The King of Hippies."

Spending nearly half a century in Goa, Eddie sometimes ran a soup kitchen and in 1975 started the Anjuna flea market as a place for hippies and other foreigners to hang out or barter goods. At first, "only freaks came," local writer Dominic Fernandes said.

"People gave things away, or it was only free ... it was like a party."

Goa today attracts a different breed of visitor, hungry for new-age experiences or just hoping to fall off the map for a while. Nearly 2.4 million tourists each year — almost twice Goa's population — have helped keep the nightlife throbbing and restaurants in business. A hotel-building boom has produced 25 five-star hotels along with many high-end guesthouses.

Goa owes much of its success to Eddie and others like him who created the buzz about the serene paradise-like beaches that brought the first wave of Western tourists, travel writer Hugh Gantzer said.

But with success, the hippies of old were shunned by the new establishment. "They have outlived their usefulness. Tourism in Goa has moved on. Hippie and backpack tourism inevitably is associated with drugs and does not make a healthy spectacle," Gantzer said.

TERROR CHARGES

Bail upheld for suspect

An Ottawa court has upheld a decision to grant bail to a local hospital worker facing terrorism charges. Misbahuddin Ahmed, 26, of Ottawa, faces charges of conspiracy to facilitate terrorism and possession of an explosive device. The prosecution had appealed Ahmed's release on a $645,000 bond, paid by his parents and in-laws who put up their homes as surety. Co-accused Khurram Sher of London was also released on bail.

Another alleged plotter, Hiva Alizadeh, remains in custody. Ahmed worked as an X-ray technician at an Ottawa hospital. When they were arrested in August, police said they seized terrorist videos and circuit boards allegedly designed to detonate bombs remotely.

Islamic militia group executes two Somali girls

- Al-Shabab accused uneducated girls of being spies
- Group says there may be more 'trials' and executions

The two accused spies died amid a fusillade of bullets from a firing squad organized by a hardline Islamist militia. The condemned pair were only girls, aged 15 and 18, and their grieving relatives say they were uneducated, usually stayed at home and could not have spied for anyone.

Horrified residents of the town of Belet Weyne, in western Somalia, were forced to watch the execution by al-Shabab on Wednesday. One woman fainted as the girls were gunned down by 10 masked executioners.

"Those who watched the event could not bear the painful experience. Two very young girls were shot as they watched and no one could help," said Dahir Casowe, a local elder.

Al-Shabab is linked to al-Qaida and has carried out whippings, amputations and executions to enforce its own strict interpretation of Islam. But this was the first public execution of girls in Belet Weyne, which al-Shabab took over just over a year ago.

Only shortly before the executions, Sheik Mohamed Ibrahim sentenced the girls to death for spying for government soldiers fighting al-Shabab.

"The execution was only meant to show the cruelty of al-Shabab militants so the residents in the region are terrified."
ELDER, TOWN OF BELET WEYNE

The only qualifications Ibrahim needed to be appointed a judge by al-Shabab were that he be male and know the Qur'an.

Duceppe downplays talk of a rift Bloc Québécois leader said he and Marois worked well together

Quebec's sovereignty movement worked to avoid a family feud Thursday, one involving powerful personalities and clashing visions about how to work toward independence.

Parti Québécois Leader Pauline Marois — who is ostensibly the leading figure in the movement — found herself defending her performance and strategic approach.

She was reacting to eyebrow-raising remarks from a perhaps even more powerful figure within her party.

In a lengthy television interview this week (this 15th anniversary of the last Quebec referendum), ex-premier Jacques Parizeau didn't once mention the current PQ leader.

But he did applaud Bloc Québécois Leader Gilles Duceppe as the sovereignty movement's best spokesman.

Secrecy keeps terror at bay: U.K.'s top spy

MI6 chief defends tactics as two U.K. inquiries probe whether MI6 was complicit in abuse of terror suspects

Britain's spy agency chief stepped out of the shadows with an unprecedented public address Thursday, defending the need for secrecy to counter growing terror threats such as Iran's nuclear proliferation.

MI6 chief John Sawers said even though Cold War-era secrecy has been lifted and intelligence agencies were working to become more accessible, keeping intelligence material secret was vital to protect people against terror attacks.

The question of secrecy has dominated world news in the last week, after the whistleblowing group WikiLeaks published nearly 400,000 U.S. intelligence logs detailing daily carnage in Iraq since the 2003 U.S.-led invasion. In July, the same group published 77,000 secret U.S. documents on the war in Afghanistan.

"Secrecy is not a dirty word ... Without secrecy there would be no intelligence services, or indeed other national assets like our special forces. Our nation would be more exposed as a result."
JOHN SAWERS, DIRECTOR OF BRITISH SPY AGENCY MI6

Some of the leaked documents show that coalition forces handed over terror suspects to Iraqi security services even after abuse was suspected, or continued with interrogations despite visible injuries to suspects. There has been no mention of MI6 involvement in the logs, however.

MI6, known as the cloak-and-dagger employer of the fictional James Bond, has tried to become less secretive. It has started posting recruitment ads in Britain's media, hired press officers, and last month released its first-ever official history.

Help on way for crime-ravaged reserve: Minister

Chief of Eabametoong in northern Ontario has declared state of emergency Military could be called

Ontario's aboriginal affairs minister said help is coming for a remote First Nations community plagued by murders, arsons and assaults, but he didn't make any firm commitments Thursday.

Chris Bentley said he's promised Eabametoong that the province will work with the federal government to come up with a plan to help.

The northern Ontario community, also known as Fort Hope, is home to 1,200 people. It has seen three murders and dozens of arsons and thefts over the last year, enough to prompt the chief to declare a state of emergency.

Chief Lewis Nate said on the weekend that money is needed to buy supplies for night patrols.

▶ Ontario Aboriginal Affairs Minister Chris Bentley

Nighttime arsons are so frequent in the community that many residents sleep with fire extinguishers.

The community currently has five police officers to respond to calls that come in 24 hours a day.

"I know there have been discussions involving (local police) and the OPP, so I'm sure they'll get the policing that is required, but at the same time, we need to deal with some of the underlying issues and the much broader challenges," said Bentley.

John Duncan, the federal Indian affairs minister, said earlier this week that calling in military reservists would be one option to quell the crime wave, reportedly fuelled by prescription drug abuse.

TWO ERUPTIONS

Volcanoes' double whammy

Two volcanoes erupted Thursday on Russia's far-eastern Kamchatka Peninsula, tossing massive ash clouds kilometres into the air, forcing flights to divert and blanketing a town with thick, heavy ash.

The Klyuchevskaya Sopka, Eurasia's highest active volcano, exploded along with the Shiveluch volcano, 70 kilometres to the northeast, said Russian officials, adding flights in the area had to change course.

Ash clouds billowed up to 10 kilometres and were spreading east across the Pacific Ocean, said vulcanologist Sergei Senyukov.

Streams of lava flowed down the slopes of Shiveluch.

Jen Burke, a meteorologist with the Alaska Aviation Weather Unit, said ash was moving across the Bering Sea.

That could put it in the path of planes flying between Asia and North America over Alaska.

Meanwhile, another volcano to the south, Gorely, has begun spewing gases and could erupt any moment, officials said.

What caused Putin's dark circles?
He wears makeup to a meeting

Was it a flying elbow during judo practice? Or a little nip and tuck?

Russian and Ukrainian media speculated feverishly Thursday over what could have caused two dark patches under Prime Minister Vladimir Putin's eyes.

Putin wore heavy makeup at a meeting Wednesday with Ukraine's pro-Russian leadership, but yellow foundation could barely cover up bluish, bruise-like blemishes and puffiness on his cheek bones.

Putin's spokesperson denied there was anything amiss. "There are no bruises there," said Dmitry Peskov. "He was just really tired after several flights and extra meetings."

But media reports suggested plastic surgery, dentistry or a judo fight that went wrong.

Volcano's guardian killed by eruption

For 33 years, Maridjan spoke to Mount Merapi, believing he could appease its unpredictable spirits by throwing offerings of rice, clothes and chickens into the volcano's gaping crater.

Many villagers took his word — not that of government officials or seismologists — as the last on when it would erupt. And the 83-year-old did appear to predict the volcano's latest eruption — which killed 33 people this week — but did not heed the warning.

As thousands of villagers streamed down the mountain's slopes, Maridjan refused to budge. More than a dozen people stayed, and perished, with him.

His rigid body was found yesterday, prostrate on the ground in the typical Islamic prayer position and caked in white soot.

On Thursday, high-profile politicians, soap opera stars, singers and hundreds of followers flocked to his funeral on the slopes of the mountain.

Maridjan was a constant source of frustration for those tasked with overseeing evacuations. Every time he refused to head down the mountain, he set a bad example for others, putting their lives at risk, they said.

Among the 14 other people found dead in and around his home, halfway up the mountain, was an Indonesian Red Cross volunteer who was trying to persuade him to leave.

Key holder

- When he was 50, Maridjan inherited the position of "key holder" of the mountain from his father, receiving the official appointment from the late sultan of Yogyakarta.
- The mystical practice persists in Indonesia, even though most of the country's 237 million people are Muslim. Islam is a relatively new arrival to the country and often coexists with animist, Hindu or Buddhist beliefs.

Tsunami death toll mounts

Rescue teams losing hope of finding missing Wall of water, created by a 7.8-magnitude quake, crashed into west Indonesian islands Monday

Rescuers searching islands ravaged by a tsunami off western Indonesia raised the death toll to 370 Thursday as more corpses were wrapped in body bags or buried by neighbours. Officials said hundreds of missing people may have been swept out to sea.

Elsewhere in Indonesia, the volcano that killed 33 people earlier this week began erupting again, though there were no reports of new injuries or damage. Mourners held a mass burial Thursday during a lull in Mount Merapi's rumblings.

The twin catastrophes struck within 24 hours in different corners of the seismically charged region, severely testing the nation's emergency response network.

"First, we saw sea water recede far away, then when it returned, it was like a big wall running toward our village. Suddenly trees, houses and all things in the village were sucked into the sea and nothing was left."
JONI SAGERU, A FISHERMAN ON THE ISLAND OF PAGAI SELATON

Islanders dug graves and slung up tarps to sleep under in one of the hardest-hit areas, where a three-metre wave had swept houses off their foundations and deposited the shattered remains in the jungle. Many residents who fled to the hills were refusing to return home for fear the sea might lash out again.

Search and rescue teams — kept away for days by stormy seas and bad weather — found roads and beaches with swollen corpses lying on them, according to Harmensyah, head of the West Sumatra provincial disaster management centre.

Some wore face masks as they wrapped corpses in black body bags on Pagai Utara, one of the four main islands in the Mentawai chain located between Sumatra and the Indian Ocean.

In a rare bright spot, an 18-month-old baby was found alive in a clump of trees on Pagai Selatan island on Wednesday. Relief co-ordinator Hermansyah said a 10-year-old boy found the toddler and that both his parents are dead.

On Pagai Seatandug island, the wave deposited giant chunks of coral and rocks the size of people into the places where homes once stood in Pro Rogat village, one of the hardest-hit areas with 65 dead.

Did tsunami warning system do its job?

The chief of Indonesia's Meteorology and Geophysic Agency, Fauzi, said the special buoys that detect sudden changes in water level broke down last month because of inexperienced operators and poor maintenance.

However, Joern Lauterjung, head of the German-Indonesia Tsunami Early Warning Project for the Potsdam-based GeoForschungs Zentrum, said a warning did go out five minutes after the quake — but the tsunami hit so fast no one was warned in time.

"The early warning system worked very well — it can be verified," he said.

He said only one sensor of 300 had not been working, and it had no effect on the system's operation.

Feds confirm GST refund on poppies for vets

Legion buys about 16M poppy pins each year from Ontario maker • Pins distributed across Canada

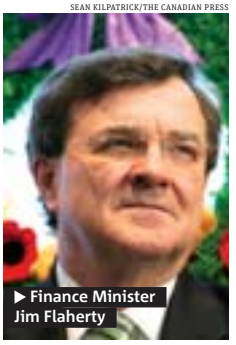
Finance Minister Jim Flaherty is cutting the Royal Canadian Legion a tax break as it prepares to start distributing millions of annual Remembrance Day poppies.

The veterans' group will get a full GST refund on purchases of poppies and wreaths, Flaherty said Thursday.

The move follows Ontario's announcement that it would forgo the province's share of the harmonized sales tax on the iconic symbols of remembrance.

The legion will get a complete refund of the sales taxes normally due on poppy purchases.

SEAN KILPATRICK/THE CANADIAN PRESS



▶ Finance Minister Jim Flaherty

There is no sales tax charged when the legions distribute the poppies in return for donations.

Flaherty says the tax break will help legions across the country.

"Poppies and wreaths hold a special status to all Canadians as symbols of the contribution, courage and sacrifice of those who served in the Canadian armed forces," he said.

Patricia Varga, the legion's dominion president, welcomed the announcement.

"Our poppy campaign is the foundation of our remembrance program and a main source of funding for the benevolent activities of our organization for our veterans," she said.

"We are pleased that the government is taking this step to restore tax relief."

Feds draft sanctions on N.Korea

New diplomatic crackdown not meant to target North Korean people: Foreign Affairs Minister

Canada is drafting "tough" new sanctions against North Korea in direct retaliation for its sinking of a South Korean warship earlier this year, the Harper government said Thursday.

Foreign Affairs Minister Lawrence Cannon said Ottawa is also downgrading its already-limited diplomatic relations with the rogue nuclear state.

Cannon said the sanctions will prohibit imports and exports to North Korea, with certain humanitarian exceptions.

Earlier this year, Canada announced stiffer restrictions on trade, investment and other bilateral relations with the communist dictatorship — as well as suspending high-level visits by its officials.

Cannon conceded that Canada's level of interaction with North Korea is already quite low.

But he said Canada's actions are important since they are based on a "position of principle" — a common refrain from the Harper government following its historic failure to win a temporary United Nations Security Council earlier this month.

Hispanics fear illegal immigrant backlash

15 Hispanics make up about 15 per cent of the U.S. population. They also comprise the vast majority of the country's roughly 11 million illegal immigrants.

Hispanics are increasingly concerned about a backlash against them, even as they are split over the effects of illegal immigration on the country. Their anxiety comes as illegal immigration and border security are playing major roles in election campaigns nationwide.

More than 60 per cent of Latinos say discrimination against Hispanics is a "major problem," up from 54 per cent who said the same in 2007, according to a report released yesterday by the non-partisan Pew Hispanic Center.

Three years ago, Hispanics were most likely to cite language skills as the biggest reason for discrimination. Now, more than one-third believe immigration is the biggest factor.

That said, the number of Latinos who reported they, their family or close friends have experienced discrimination remained unchanged from last year.

French union protests weaken

◗ Fuel shortages still problem because of refinery strike ◗ One in five gas stations remain empty

French unions are not giving up. Thursday brought more nationwide street protests and strike-caused travel woes, even though parliament already has approved President Nicolas Sarkozy's plan to raise the retirement age to 62.

Still, turnout appeared markedly weaker compared to recent protests that drew millions of people nationwide. In Paris, demonstrators waved union flags and set off flares, while in southern Marseille they beat drums and blew whistles. Protesters are waging a last-ditch attempt to persuade conservative Sarkozy not to sign the bill changing the minimum age for retirement to 62 from 60.

But Sarkozy has refused to back down, even amid two weeks of strikes. And those strikes have been losing momentum for days.

A small number of trains were cancelled Thursday, but the problem was bigger for airlines. One-third of flights at Paris' Charles de Gaulle airport and half of those at Orly were cancelled.

Jobless numbers seen staying high

In a survey in July, economists predicted unemployment in the U.S. of 8.7 per cent at the end of next year. In the survey before that, they foresaw 8.4 per cent. Some now think unemployment won't drop to a historically normal 5.5 per cent to 6 per cent until at least 2018 — several years later than envisioned earlier.

Cellphone users complain most, watchdog says

Billing errors, contract disputes top list Trying to keep cell number when changing carriers also high

The fast-growing and competitive wireless industry is getting a lot of heat from consumers, who have increasingly turned to a government watchdog about problems with their service providers.

Although there has been a big increase in the number of wireless carriers in the market this year, the three established wireless carriers — Bell, Telus and Rogers — received almost all of the wireless complaints tallied in the 2009-10 report.

Canada's commissioner for Complaints for Telecommunications Services reported Thursday that wireless carriers were the target of 52 per cent of the 3,700 complaints it received in the 2009-10 monitoring period.

Bell Canada had 1,428 complaints, Telus had 657 complaints and Rogers had 540 complaints. New wireless carrier Wind Mobile, which began offering service in late 2009, had one complaint.

Most of the wireless complaints involved billing errors, contract disputes and what's known as "number portability," which means being able to keep your cellphone handset when switching the service to another wireless carrier.

The telecom watchdog said the "number portability" complaints involved customers being billed by both the "new" provider and the "old" provider for services during the switchover.

Automated calls put on hold

Cable, phone and wireless company Telus has reached an agreement with Canada's telecommunications regulator after it broke the rules by using automated calling devices to contact customers without their permission.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission said an investigation found Telus was using automated calling devices to contact prepaid mobile customers to warn them their minutes were running out — and how to buy more to avoid an interruption of service.

The devices can only be used to contact customers if they have given prior consent.

The CRTC said Telus has not admitted fault and it has not formally found the company liable, but Telus has voluntarily agreed to stop making such calls without prior consent.

DAVID DESCÔTEAUX

Crucial mid-term elections will take place next Tuesday in the United States. The Republicans could regain political control in Washington and block Obama's projects.

Bryan Caplan, economics professor at George Mason University, has some advice for the millions of voters who plan to cast ballots on election day: If you don't understand basic economics, why not just stay home?

In his book, The Myth Of The Rational Voter, Caplan says it's wrong to think that politicians don't listen to the people. On the contrary, politicians do listen … and that's the problem! Voters are riddled with biases, according to Caplan. Especially when it comes to the economy.

Several polls carried out in the U.S. have revealed that half of voters don't know the name of their senator or representative. A good portion of the population thinks that foreign aid represents 24 per cent of the federal budget. (The correct answer: One per cent.)

"Many people have backward ideas about economics, having never studied the subject. And their opinions are generally the opposite of what an economics course would teach," Caplan once told me when I interviewed him for a business magazine. For example, people who have not studied economics usually think protectionism is a good thing. "Instead of saying, 'I don't know, I never studied that,' they state with conviction: 'Foreigners are stealing our jobs! We have to do something, regardless of what economists say!'"

The average voter exhibits numerous biases in economic matters, according to Caplan's research. Among other things, people tend to underestimate the advantages of market mechanisms, or the benefits of immigration and free trade. They also like to blame scapegoats for economic problems — speculators, oil companies, Wal-Mart, the Chinese …

The end result: In order to cater to voters, politicians enact laws that persecute those scapegoats, or erect protectionist barriers (taxes and tariffs) to limit free trade. Policies that, according to Caplan, impoverish the economy as a whole. The professor, who does not shy away from controversy, is consistent with his recommendations: Encouraging people to vote is a bad idea, he says. "Those who abstain from voting are, on average, less educated and less informed. If all of those people voted, the average voter would be even more ignorant of economic matters." Politicians would adjust their electoral platforms to cater to those voters, proposing even worse policies. "If you think politicians currently aim for the lowest common denominator among voters, you ain't seen nothing yet. That denominator can get even lower!"

"Among other things, people tend to underestimate the advantages of market mechanisms, or the benefits of immigration and free trade."

Voting is a civic duty, they say. But for some, could the opposite be true?

David Descôteaux is a freelance economic journalist and an associate researcher at the Montreal Economic Institute.

SNC drops plan to hike stake

SNC-Lavalin Group Inc. has walked away from plans to purchase an extra 10 per cent stake in Toronto's Highway 407 and cancelled a public offering of its subsidiary due to "adverse market conditions."

The Montreal-based engineering and construction giant said its subsidiary, TransAxio Highway Concession Inc., will no longer exercise its first right of refusal to purchase Cintra Infraestructuras' stake in the toll road.

The decision is good news for the Canada Pension Plan Investment Board, which will now proceed with its $894-million offer to purchase the stake from Cintra.

The pension fund manager is also indirectly buying another 30 per cent stake in the highway through a $3.2-billion takeover of Australian toll operator Intoll Group, formerly Macquarie Infrastructure Group.

Analysts say SNC pulled the plug because investors were unwilling to pay the price being sought for the shares.

TSX investors timid ahead of U.S. stimulus

Metals surge as financials, techs dip ● Questions about U.S. Fed's bond-buying plan create volatility

The Toronto stock market closed flat Thursday as commodity prices and stocks rose against a falling U.S. dollar.

But many sectors were held back amid uncertainty about the size of the U.S. Federal Reserve's plan to inject more stimulus into the U.S. economy.

The S&P/TSX composite index dipped 3.16 points to 12,564.09 as investors gave a mixed reception to a variety of earnings reports, while the TSX Venture Exchange gained 18.13 points to 1,926.16.

The Canadian dollar racked up a solid gain, rising 0.69 of a US cent to 97.9 cents US after a strengthening U.S. currency had pushed the loonie lower the previous two sessions.

Gold stocks led advancers on higher bullion prices and a well-received earnings report from Barrick Gold Corp.

Barrick shares rose $1.13 to $48.07 as the company posted a record third-quarter profit of $837 million US or 84 cents per share, rising from a year-ago loss of $5.35 billion or $6.07 per share when it wound up of its gold hedging program.

The base metals sector was also positive as the December copper contract on the New York Mercantile Exchange added one cent to $3.79 US a pound. Equinox Minerals gained 13 cents to $5.58, while Lundin Mining climbed 19 cents to $6.50.

Financials led decliners with Royal Bank down 80 cents at $54.12 and TD Bank also off 80 cents at $72.75.

Tech stocks were also weak with shares in electronics manufacturer Celestica Inc. falling 49 cents, or 5.4 per cent, to $8.59 as the company said revenue slipped to $1.55 billion US, a drop of $10 million from a year earlier. THE CANADIAN PRESS

5 MINUTES WITH: COLLIN THOMPSON

Canada's former junior national figure skating champion has transferred his winning streak to the fashion world with a successful Hong Kong-based shoe company, Cipherism.

How does one make the leap to business mogul from skating champ?
Looking back at it, the lessons I learned from figure skating were probably the most influential. In skating, if you want to learn something you have to go down the ice, jump, and fall on your own, and maybe fall a thousand times. And I think that's really with anything in life. So I literally woke up one morning and said, "You know, I'm going to design shoes." And I got on the computer and I drew something absolutely horrible. But you've got to start somewhere.

What made you decide to move to Hong Kong?
I studied film at York, and one day I picked up this movie called Fallen Angels and it was the most visually breathtaking thing I'd ever seen. From there, I watched all the Wong Kar Wai films and got really into Chinese cinema. Hong Kong provided a landscape that was very futuristic, international and multicultural, but not in the way we know it in Toronto: To me it really is the brave new world and the shift in the way the world operates socioeconomically is happening right here.

Hong Kong has traditionally been a financial hub, so what has your experience been as a young creative professional?
It started off very difficult because five years ago the bankers were still at the top of the social echelon. But when the economic crash hit, there was a mass exodus of bankers and they realized that wasn't what they could base their economy on. You have to be innovative. So there's been a big push to support and enhance creativity here.

Many people with design ambitions never see their dreams get off the ground. What do you think it is about your brand that's resonating?
People really like things that are authentic, and they really buy into the Horatio Alger story about the guy who came to Hong Kong and said, "Hey, I'm going to draw some sneakers, and if you like them, this is what we're about."

Do you ever dust off your skates and take a spin around the rink?
Only when I'm trying to woo women (laughs). It works pretty well.

Re: What do you do when joke's on you? (Oct 28)

TORONTO. The article by Mr. Mazerolle contains some significantly offensive remarks. In particular, he likens feelings, when he failed to succeed as a standup comic, to "something akin to a kid who drops his ice cream combined with those Palestinian women you see mourning on television."

This remark is offensive on many levels, but in particular it is demeaning and dismissive of women suffering the loss of loved ones during a war. The referral to the "Palestinian women" in this context implies that they, and their grief, are somehow lesser, and mocks their reactions to their losses. I doubt Mr. Mazerolle would have made a similar reference to mourning Canadian women. His use of the grief of these women in this context serves to dehumanize them and is certainly not funny.

The use of the reference to the Palestinian women in conjunction with a dropped ice cream cone is a further degradation to the plight of these women, which should be considered separately from their context in the political arena in the Middle East. MALERIE ROSE

James Franco takes on the real-life survival story of Aron Ralston in 127 Hours
Actor underwent big weight loss to mimic what happened to Ralston during his five days of having his arm trapped under a boulder

Playing a hiker with his arm pinned under a boulder for five days brought its own set of challenges for James Franco, who stars as Aron Ralston in Danny Boyle's true-life 127 Hours. The first thing he had to worry about, though, was his waistline.

"He told me I should go on a diet," Franco says of his first meeting with the director. "First of all, Aron was in great shape, but also he lost 40 pounds while he was there, from water deprivation mostly."

Of course, recreated a rapid weight loss during the film's production wasn't feasible, so Franco shed as much weight as he could before filming, then relied on some helpful tools to bulk back up when needed.

"We actually even built this prosthetic that we ended up unfortunately calling 'the plumper,'" he says. "It was just this mouthpiece that would plump my cheeks out for the early parts of the film, and then as he started deteriorating we could use smaller and smaller versions until we didn't use any."

One useful tool for capturing Ralston's ordeal was the extensive video diary he kept.

"When we watched the real videos, one of the more powerful things about them is how simple it was and how direct and connected it was," Franco remembers.

"Some of the video messages are verbatim what he actually said," Franco says.

However, as an actor, he wasn't interested in just regurgitating Ralston's words.

"Our whole kind of approach — not just for the video messages but in general — was that we would honour Aron's story and we would do everything that he did, but also we wanted to kind of have our own approach to the story," he explains.

"And so with the video messages, they were scripted, but I felt like Danny gave me the freedom to be just a little loose with the words. But every once in a while there'd be a line in there and I'd say to myself, 'I just won't say that because it's kind of stupid.' And then Danny would come to me and say, 'Well, actually, for whatever reason, Aron is insistent that you say those two words.'"

127 Hours not typical acting role for Franco

James Franco is the first to admit 127 Hours isn't your typical film, since it wasn't his typical acting job, either.

"There were a lot of things that were unusual," he says. "I mean, you don't usually spend most movies with an armed pinned behind a boulder. But then you also don't spend most movies alone or without other actors. So all of that took adjusting."

Franco has been making a lot of adjustments lately, choosing career moves that have surprised onlookers — including his recent stint on General Hospital and his return to school. But he claims he's not in a "why not?" phase of his career.

A Millenium let down

The Girl Who Kicked The Hornets Nest
Genre: Drama
Director: Daniel Alfredson
Stars: Noomi Rapace, Michael Nyqvist, Lena Endre

The cinematic adaptation of Stieg Larsson's Millennium Trilogy kicked off with a bang thanks to The Girl With The Dragon Tattoo, which was excellent. Sadly, it ends on a whimper with this disappointing movie.

While the first film offered delightfully trashy sex-fueled intrigue, the sequels have gone for an irritating mix of ill-conceived action movie theatrics and endless exposition. This 2.5 hour conclusion is primarily dedicated to characters explaining the plot of the previous two movies and somehow the story arc of the series still doesn't quite make sense – and that's a difficult feat.

Lead actors Noomi Rapace and Michael Nyqvist are still compelling screen presences portraying intriguing characters, but even they are drowned out by all the exposition. The actors seem bored by the material this time and understandably so; audiences will likely feel the same way.

Winnebago Man
Genre: Comedy
Director: Ben Steinbauer
Stars: Jack Rebney
◍◍◍½

In 1989, Jack Rebney's expletive-laden tirades cut from a motor home company's industrial video wound their way across the country via VHS tapes and Internet video, making him a pop culture poster boy for bad days. Director Ben Steinbauer elects to track him down. Winnebago Man is stunning; an endearing peek into one man's dreadful day and its decades-long, universal resound.

KEITH CARMAN

Tamara Drewe
Genre: Comedy
Director: Stephen Frears
Stars: Gemma Arterton, Roger Allam
◍◍◍

This big screen adaptation of the Guardian comic strip Tamara Drewe sees director Stephen Frears return to the social satire of early work. The story of a successful columnist (Gemma Arterton) who stirs things up in her childhood village of rural Dorset is an amusing distraction with some winning performances —particularly from Arterton, who makes the selfish Tamara likeable.

RICHARD CROUSE

Inside Job
Genre: Documentary
Director: Charles Ferguson
Stars: Matt Damon, Christine Lagarde, George Soros
◍◍◍

It's hard to imagine a more thorough examination of the global economic collapse within the restrictions of a feature length film than Charles Ferguson's Inside Job. The director piles on information at an incredible clip. A complex, maddening, informative, and thankfully entertaining dissection of a difficult subject that demands close attention, but pays off.

PHIL BROWN

You Don't Like the Truth: 4 Days Inside Guantanamo
Genre: Documentary
Directors: Luc Cote and Patricio Henriquez
◍◍◍

A decent doc rendered especially topical by its release in the midst of Omar Khadr's trial, You Don't Like the Truth weaves footage of the accused war criminal's 2003 interrogation at the hands of CSIS into a conventional talking-heads format. Directors Luc Cote and Patricio Henriquez have edited their source material judiciously, and the film is powerful despite their disinterest in supplying much of a counterpoint.

ADAM NAYMAN

Handsome Harry
Genre: Drama
Director: Bette Gordon
Stars: Jamey Sheridan, Campbell Scott, Steve Buscemi
◍◍◍

Variety director Bette Gordon maintains her one-movie-per-decade schedule with Handsome Harry, though you wouldn't know it on the surface. While Gordon is known for her visually expressive films with a feminist slant, this new project is a subdued actor-driven vehicle about a Vietnam navy vet haunted by his past. It's a delicate story about memory and male sexuality that might seem outside of Gordon's wheelhouse, but plays just as well as anything she's made before.

HOLLYWOOD LOVES TO GIVE YOU A GOOD SCARE

A Saturday matinee screening of last year's Paranormal Activity was the first and only time I have ever heard anyone actually scream in a theatre. I don't mean a quiet whimper followed by an embarrassed laugh or a frightened little squeal. No, I mean a full-on, open throated howl of terror.

The release of Paranormal's prequel last weekend got me thinking about other big screen scream worthy scenes. So just in time for Halloween are some leave-the-lights-on movie moments.

If Alfred Hitchcock had any doubts about the effectiveness of the shower sequence in Psycho they must have been put to bed when he received an angry letter from the father whose daughter stopped bathing after seeing the bathtub murder scene in Les Diaboliques and then, more distressingly, refused to shower after seeing Psycho. Hitch's response to the concerned dad? "Send her to the dry cleaners."

The shower scene was terrifying but at least it was allowed to stay in the movie. In 1931 Frankenstein star Boris Karloff demanded the scene in the movie where the monster plays with a little girl, throwing flowers in a pond be cut from the picture. It's a cute scene until the beast runs out of flowers and tosses the little girl into the water, leaving her to drown. Karloff, and audiences, objected to the violence against the youngster and the scene was shortened, then removed altogether and remained unseen until a special videotape release 48 years later.

More recently The Exorcist (now beautifully restored on Blu Ray) so traumatized audiences with shots of the possessed Regan MacNeil's 360-degrees head spinning that in the U.K. the St. John's Ambulance Brigade were on-call at screenings to tend to fainters. Star Linda Blair says she wasn't traumatized by the film, but admits there has been one long lasting side effect. "You wouldn't believe how often people ask me to make my head spin around," she says.

Blair may have been unfazed while shooting her gruesome scenes, but not all actors emerge unscathed. Elisha Cuthbert was so grossed out while shooting the notorious blender scene in the down-and-dirty flick Captivity she says she felt "physically ill twice" and had to have a bucket nearby.

Scary scenes one and all, but recounting them begs the question, why are we drawn to them? The quick answer comes from Alfred Hitchcock who said, "People like to be scared when they feel safe."

Funny man Ferrell gets animated

Former SNL star takes on role of an inept evildoer Actor enjoyed freedom he had with character

STEVE GOW
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Will Ferrell is such a humble guy that when he's asked what it's like to lead a big animated comedy like Megamind, the affable actor quickly diverts the attention.

"I don't really consider myself front and centre of this fine cast," said Ferrell before noticing a giant banner over his shoulder clearly focusing on the titular character. "So I guess I am front and centre."

Indeed he is. Ferrell is the voice of Megamind, a blue-skinned supervillain that suddenly defeats his nemesis and finds himself in the unlikely role of public defender.

It may be his second animated feature (after Curious George), but the movie does mark a first for the funnyman.

"It's the first time (my kids) have commented on something I've been in," laughed Ferrell admitting his children didn't necessarily affect his choice in the role.

"This was just kind of a decision based pretty much on wanting to try and do another animated movie and getting the chance to work with (director) Tom (McGrath) so my children were not consulted — nor are they ever consulted about anything. It's a very strict household."

Kidding aside, its obvious Ferrell had fun conjuring up the voice of an inept big-headed evildoer that hilariously mispronounces words like "school" — the result of much improvisation in the recording studio.

"There is a great amount of freedom in terms of getting to come up with stuff on the spot," said Ferrell, who has considerable respect for the art. "What's lost on the project is how hard it is to articulate any emotional gearshift just with your voice. Playing the comedy is one thing but I think there's a real skill for any of these actors that can effectively do that consistently."

Always a Joker

We hope. "I have a lot of tight leather pants in a vault," said Will Ferrell when asked what traits he shares with supervillain Megamind. "I don't wear them. I just keep them there and there is a part of my body — that I can't go into detail on — that is blue."

Making Wicked feel good

HANDOUT/JOAN MARCUS

▶ Jackie Burns as Elphaba

Prequel to Wizard of Oz entertains

JOHN KEILLOR
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Movies like Mean Girls and Heathers show how girls sometimes treat each other badly, but the musical Wicked reveals why friendship and kindness are simply better alternatives to cruelty.

As a prequel to The Wizard of Oz, Wicked is adapted from Gregory Maguire's 1995 novel. It's about the school days of Glinda, the Good Witch of the South, and Elphaba, the Wicked Witch of the West.

"At school, our characters both take turns being good or bad," says Chanda Lee Schwartz, who plays Glinda. "My character is very rich and popular; she doesn't even understand what 'No' means, so it's hard for her to understand what effect she has on others."

"Elphaba has it tough," says Jackie Burns, who plays the wicked one. "She has green skin and her parents don't love her. Plus she's very unlucky, so she's awkward and overflowing with emotion. But she's smart and still tries incredibly hard."

"Elphaba has it tough. She has green skin and her parents don't love her." JACKIE BURNS

These girls share nothing except a school and some skills that set them apart from the rest of the crowd. Glinda doesn't know how to work, because her life has been so easy. Combining the grace of Glinda with the tenacity of Elphaba, the two girls start to realize their potential. They become friends even though Glinda's high social position at school creates pressure not to befriend the green skinned girl.

A new side of Sarah

GILLES MINGASSON/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Whatever you may think of Sarah Palin, the fact remains Alaska is magnificent with her as its presenter.

Sarah Palin's Alaska, premiering on TLC on Nov. 14, adds TV host to Palin's crowded resume, which already includes former governor, former GOP vice-presidential candidate, bestselling author and conservative superstar.

Palin also is a wife, a mother of five and a grandmother, of course, and her new series integrates her home life with Alaska's great outdoors.

Judging from the first of eight episodes, Sarah Palin's Alaska keeps politics out of the picture. Sure, the show is effective in selling the Palin brand. But along the way, Palin throws herself into selling the grandeur of Alaska.

The much-anticipated documentary series, shot last summer, is based at Palin's lakeside home in Wasilla. There, cupcakes are baked and kids do their chores (or hear about it from Palin). Then Palin sets off, with family members in tow, on a jaunt such as salmon fishing on Big River Lake, where, almost within reach at the shoreline, a family of bears keeps them amused.

"Girls, when you cast, don't aim toward the bear," Palin cautions daughter Piper and niece McKinley in their boat.

"Why?" is the automatic comeback. Any parent will instantly relate.

Later in the program, Palin demonstrates mettle (and alarm) as she goes rock-climbing with her husband, Todd, at Denali National Park – and gets stuck midway.

The guide calls down instructions and encouragement, but Palin is stalled.

"I just don't like heights!" she declares. "I was so cocky – I'm being punished for it. I don't know if I can do this!"

It's a remarkable admission from this famously can-do personality, and, as viewers are informed, some 45 minutes pass before she figures out how to continue her ascent. Then she does it.

"That's so much worse than I ever thought it would be!" she says after reaching the summit.

The series is produced by Mark Burnett, whose many credits include Survivor and The Apprentice. In a recent interview with The Associated Press, he marveled at how gung-ho all the Palins were in taking part.

"It would start out with, 'We're gonna have Sarah and Todd do something,'" Burnett said. "And as she's getting ready, she would say, 'Piper, you want to come? Willow, you want to come?' Take the politics away, and this is a family, and they hang out a lot together." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

YOUR HALLOWEEN PLAYLIST

Sound Check

ALAN CROSS

SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

This weekend will be frantic with Halloween parties. But what to include on the playlist? Here's what I think is an essential list that DOESN'T include clichés like Thriller, Ghostbusters and The Monster Mash.

Alien Sex Fiend/Now I'm Feeling Zombified
Born in the Batcave (a London club that served as the original crypt for the British Goth scene), ASF featured Nik Fiend on vocals. He used to work the cloakroom and given the nature of the clientele, I'm sure he handled many actual cloaks.

Bauhaus/Bela Lugosi's Dead
Bauhaus' first single—a sprawling nine-and-a-half minute echo-drenched monster — came out in August 1979. Point of trivia: the artwork for the original single is a still from The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, a horror film from 1920.

Nick Cave and the Bad Seeds/Red Right Hand
Nick scooped the title Milton's Paradise Lost and turned it into the story of a serial killer from the ghetto.

Legend has it this song inspired the entire vibe of the soundtrack from the first X-Files movie.

The Birthday Party/Release the Bats
Before Nick moved to England, he fronted the Birthday Party, one of Goth's first wave of groups. One listen and you'll be swatting imaginary bats away from your head all night.

Roky Erickson/Burn the Flames
A vampire sits at a piano exhorting the eternal flames to burn higher. Used in Return of the Living Dead.

Oingo Boingo/Dead Man's Party
The title track of OB's fourth album back in 1985. The video featuring dancing skeletons became indelibly connected to the band for the rest of their career. Interesting fact: Oingo Boingo leader Danny Elfman now composes for movies and television. He wrote the theme for The Simpsons.

Mike Oldfield/Tubular Bells
When director William Friedkin was looking for something supernaturally scary to serve as the theme for The Exorcist, he found it in the opening sequence of a just-released one-man-opus called Tubular Bells by Englishman Mike Oldfield.

The entire piece is almost 26 minutes long, but all you really need is the first four minutes.

The Von Drats/Phantom Chop
Group from Dratsylvannia (at least that's what they told me) temporarily living in Toronto until the villagers give up and go home with their pitchforks. They learned everything they needed to know about music from the theme song of The Munsters. Strats and Fender amps with the tremolo set on "kill."

▶ Mariah Carey

Mariah Carey is going to have to add lullabies to her repertoire.

The superstar singer confirmed on NBC's Today show Thursday that she and husband Nick Cannon are expecting their first child. Carey says the baby is due in the spring.

Carey had declined to discuss her pregnancy, the subject of rampant speculation for months, until now.

"Yes, we are pregnant, it's true," she said in an interview with Access Hollywood's Billy Bush that was shown on Today.

"It's been a long journey, but it's been tough because I've been trying to ... hold on to a shred of privacy, and that was not easy."

Carey, 40, and Cannon, 30, have been the subject of a baby watch since they got married after a whirlwind romance two years ago. They laughed off the rumours when they occurred soon after their wedding. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

His rep says no, but a source says Justin Timberlake and Jessica Biel are history

Justin Timberlake reportedly cheated on Jessica Biel with The Daily Show correspondent Olivia Munn after convincing Munn his relationship with Biel was actually over, sources tell Us Weekly. Munn had reportedly spurned his advances, but Timberlake "has been telling people it's over with Jessica, even though the reality is he's just doing it behind her back," the source says, adding that he was convincing enough for Munn to invite him back to her hotel room, where "they were openly affectionate." Timberlake's rep denies the story

Smith's doctor acquitted, psychiatrist guilty

A jury yesterday convicted Anna Nicole Smith's psychiatrist Khristine Eroshevich and boyfriend Howard K. Stern of conspiracy counts, but acquitted the doctor who prescribed drugs for her of all charges.

The only conviction against Stern was for giving false names and acting by fraud to obtain prescriptions. Eroshevich was also convicted of unlawfully prescribing Vicodin by fraud.

The jury acquitted defendant Dr. Sandeep Kapoor of all charges. The jury found the prosecution did not present enough evidence to convict Kapoor of six charges that he provided excessive prescription drugs to Smith.

The defendants were charged with conspiracy, excessive prescribing of opiates and sedatives to an addict, and fraudulently obtaining drugs by using false names.

Costume that's fit for a Hollywood princess

Tom Cruise and Katie Holmes want only the best for their daughter Suri Cruise, and that goes for her Halloween costume, too. The proud parents spent approximately $6,000 on a princess costume featuring a tulle skirt and pearl embroidery for the fashion-conscious 4-year-old, according to In Touch. "Suri already has her fairy-princess gown and will be wearing diamonds with her costume," a source says.

Pasta problems? We got you covered

LARRY CROWE/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

▶ The bowtie shape of farfalle pasta helps carry plenty of sauce as well as the pieces of meat to your mouth.

How to cook, dress and eat every pasta in every shape

Chances are you know linguine goes with clam sauce and fettuccine loves Alfredo. But which pasta pairs with pesto? Or a hefty carbonara?

"Pasta has evolved over many hundreds of years in Italy and it's taken a long time for them to work out what tastes best," says British chef Jacob Kenedy, co-author with graphic designer Caz Hildebrand of The Geometry of Pasta. Together they are advocates of a simple truth: Pasta and sauce, correctly paired, yield a sublime experience.

They had plenty of material to work with. More than 300 shapes of pasta exist, each with a specific texture and strategy for delivering flavours.

In general, lighter sauces pair well with thin pastas. Oily, punchy sauces go with thicker pastas. Sauce will cling to a rough-textured pasta, such as a ridged penne, Kenedy says, while a smoother one like spaghetti will create a more delicate dish. Short tubes and cup shapes are good for "sauces with bits in them," Kenedy says, such as those with diced meat or vegetables.

Ingredients :

- 250 g (1/2 lb) farfalle pasta
- 75 ml (5 tbsp) heavy cream
- 50 g (1 3/4 oz) prosciutto, sliced into 1-cm (1/2-inch) strips
- Generous 125 ml (1/2 cup) grated Parmesan, plus extra to serve
- 2 egg yolks
- Salt and ground black pepper, to taste

"More intricate shapes are quite fun to play with," he says. "It's like when you're a little kid and you put things in your mouth."

For instance, pairing twisted strands of gemelli with long, smooth green beans creates a pun in your mouth, as does pairing snail-shaped lumache with actual snails. "That's a joke, but it does eat well together," Kenedy says.

And a no-fail formula? If you know which region a shape comes from, the sauce from that region will almost certainly be a natural mate. Liguria's spiral-shaped trofie were designed to trap the garlic and basil of pesto Genovese, just as Rome's massive, pipe-like bucatini goes with silky, unctuous carbonara, possibly named for the charcoal workers ("carbone" means charcoal) the meal supposedly sustained.

Which doesn't mean you need to fill your cupboard with dozens of different pastas. But at least make room for a few new ideas.

"It's a shame not to feel encouraged to try some of these amazing shapes," says Hildebrand.

Farfalle With Prosciutto and Cream

Preparation:

1. Bring a large saucepan of salted water to a boil. Cook pasta to al dente (still barely firm at the centre) according to package directions.
2. While pasta cooks, in a large bowl, combine cream, prosciutto, Parmesan and egg yolks. Season with salt and pepper.
3. Drain farfalle and toss into sauce. Serve with extra cheese. Makes 4 servings.

America's wild water

From east to west, the United States offers some the best whitewater trips in the world

Every country will tell you that their whitewater is the biggest and baddest in the world. But for sheer scale, variety and jaw-dropping gorgeousness the USA probably takes the top honours

Paddling, or more often, being sucked along the potentially deadly waters of a desolate river gorge may not be every one's idea of fun.

But try it once and you'll find whitewater rafting is more addictive than crack cocaine. Luckily, it's also more fun.

Every country claims its whitewater is bigger, faster, scarier than the next, but the USA can fairly lay claim to having the largest number of top quality sites and tour organisers. Here's our favourites:

▶ Whitewater — as in the Grand Canyon — can be addictive.

The Chattooga River
North Carolina
Starts at Whitesides Mountain, deep in "Deliverance" country, and if it wasn't for the noise of the rapids you could almost hear the duelling banjos. In summer the waters are slower, giving you more time to soak up some of the US's most evocative scenery.
wildwaterrafting.com

The Taos Box
Taos, New Mexico
This trip down the spectacular Rio Grande is not for passengers — it's a tough gig. The claim to be the US's premier whitewater one-day wilderness trip is a fair one — the scenery and wildlife are amazing. But it's the build-up through from a relatively calm class III rapid through class IV's to a huge class V which will leave you gasping.
santafeadventure.com

Grand Canyon
This being the Grand Canyon you'll already be overwhelmed by the sheer scale — so it will come as no surprise that this is a minimum three-day trip. The powerful waters of the Colorado River take you to parts of the Canyon that few tourists get to see. Sleep under the stars and get the weird feeling of becoming attuned to the river.

The American River
California
Outside Sacramento the South Fork of the American River flows down the western slope of the Sierra Nevada Mountains and offers a blend of relaxing calms and thrilling Class III rapids. It's a brilliant introduction to the sport.

One Giant title drought

- San Francisco can't blame a curse for its lack of a World Series win
- Franchise has five titles, but hasn't won one since it left New York

ERIC RISBERG/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mike Fontenot spent more than three years with perhaps baseball's most cursed team, those lovable losers known as the Chicago Cubs.

It taught Fontenot all about long-suffering fans desperate for a championship.

Little did he know that when he got traded to San Francisco in August, Fontenot was joining a team with its own set of title-starved supporters.

"They've had the goat, the whole Bartman thing and everything else going on over there," the veteran infielder said of the Cubs. "I didn't realize that they hadn't won here. I remember when they went to the World Series and watching the games in 2002. I guess I hadn't realized it's been more than 50 years."

San Francisco might not get the attention for heartbreak that places like Boston and Philadelphia received until recently, but the city by the bay trails only Cleveland when it comes to the length of a World Series title drought.

Only two National League franchises have won more championships than the Giants' five, but all of those came before the team moved to California in 1958.

"It would mean a lot," former Giants slugger Barry Bonds said.

Bonds almost delivered in 2002, when he hit eight post-season home runs and helped San Francisco to a 5-0 lead against the Angels in the potential Game 6 clincher. The Angels rallied to win the game, then the World Series, extending the Giants' anguish.

"It hurts," said Giants special instructor Shawon Dunston, who homered to give them a 2-0 lead in Game 6 that year. "We had it and they beat us fair and square. It sticks. What hurt is I didn't win a World Series as a player."

He is far from alone when it comes to title-less Giants in San Francisco. The franchise was unable to win it with Willie Mays, Willie McCovey, Orlando Cepeda and Juan Marichal in the 1960s, Will Clark and Matt Williams in the '80s, and for 15 years with Bonds in the lineup.

UFC absorbs its sister circuit

Merger with WEC will add two new weight classes

Looking to expand its brand, the UFC is absorbing its sister World Extreme Cagefighting circuit.

The consolidation immediately gives the mixed martial arts juggernaut two more weight classes — featherweight (145 pounds) and bantamweight (135 pounds) — while the WEC lightweights will be rolled into the UFC's existing 155-pound division.

The merger adds some 60 to 70 new fighters to the UFC ranks, swelling the roster to 260.

Those extra resources will help make it easier for the UFC to continue spreading its tentacles around the globe. And given the UFC has bigger name value than the WEC, it will get more bang for its buck from the WEC fighting alumni.

"It's time," UFC president Dana White said on a media conference call. "As we continue to grow globally, and now we're going into these new markets like China, India, Mexico, we're doing enough fights et cetera, et cetera to fold this thing into the UFC."

"Our goal is build this sport worldwide and continue to add weight divisions until we have every single weight division in the UFC."
UFC PRESIDENT DANA WHITE

The UFC bought the WEC in 2006, streamlining it to focus on lighter weight classes from 155 pounds on down. That year, the UFC put on 18 shows — all in the U.S. with 12 in its home base of Las Vegas and the rest in California. In 2009, it was 21 shows in five countries and the count this year is expected to reach 24 events in six countries.

Under the merger, WEC featherweight title-holder Jose Aldo — the organization's biggest star — immediately becomes the UFC champion at that weight.

"This kid could be a huge star," White said of the 24-year-old Brazilian who has lost just once in 19 fights.

"He's a kid who can dominate at that weight class and can probably move up to 155 and challenge the guys there. Who knows. Anything can happen."

RUSSELL

ERIK GUAY: SKIING'S CONSTANT CANUCK

He bears his sport's greatest treasure in a silver case the size of a hatbox.

Canadian ski racing star Erik Guay is anonymous as he strolls down Toronto's busy Yonge Street. "Kind of looks like I'm carrying my makeup kit," Guay grins. "But this, for a skier, is like winning the Stanley Cup I would imagine."

With that the 29-year-old native of Mont Tremblant, Que., extracts the Crystal Globe emblematic of being the season's best Super-G skier on the World Cup circuit.

In Europe he's a god. Guay is the first Canadian since Steve Podborski in 1982 to win the Globe.

"It was the culmination of a lot of hard work," Guay says with obvious pride as he cradles the Globe. "It meant so much to not only me but to my mother and father and to every member of our ski racing family."

Erik Guay missed two gold medals by mere hundredths of a second at the Olympics in Whistler.

▶ Erik Guay

For these close calls he's been written off, along with other members of the Canadian Alpine Ski Team who failed to reach the podium, as underachievers.

Nothing could be further from the truth, especially in Guay's case.

"The importance of winning that Crystal Globe is lost on many Canadians," says world downhill champion John Kucera.

"The Olympics is a big event but a one-day event. The Globe means that you are the force in your discipline all season long."

Being underrated is nothing new for Guay.

His statistics speak volumes. With 13 podium finishes on the World Cup circuit he is one shy of Ken Read's career total of 14 and only seven behind Podborski who is the all-time Canadian leader. Read and Podborski claim legendary status as members of the Crazy Canucks.

In the meantime, Erik Guay shows every sign that he may someday soon surpass his heroes.

"He didn't have anyone to show him the way," acknowledges Manuel Osborne-Paradis. "Erik was on his own on the way up and he's figured out how to do this all on his own."

He is a winter superstar who has eluded the limelight. For Erik Guay it's a shame because only now is he entering his prime.

He is skiing's constant Canuck who may someday be remembered as the greatest of them all.

Als won't be caught relaxing

Though they've clinched East, Alouettes will still field regulars vs. Argos

They've clinched top spot in the East Division but the Montreal Alouettes aren't about to kick back and cool their jets until the CFL playoffs.

The defending Grey Cup champions face the Toronto Argonauts Friday coming off an embarrassing 40-3 road loss last week to the Hamilton Tiger-Cats. So while the game means nothing in the standings for the Alouettes, they will still field their regulars — including star quarterback Anthony Calvillo — and play to win as they look to reclaim their form.

"When you play poorly you always want to bounce back," said Calvillo. "We're looking to get back on to the field and make sure we win these next two games."

Facing Montreal's best is just fine with Argos head coach Jim Barker.

"I'm glad they're bringing their A team," he said. "That's what makes the game meaningful, so for us it's fantastic.

"We know they're going to come in here and try to make a statement to us and we can't control what they do. All we can control is what we do and that's what we're planning to do."

The Alouettes (11-5), who will host Toronto or Hamilton in the East final Nov. 21, will have three key veterans back. Receiver Kerry Watkins and kicker Damon Duval both return from injury while Larry Taylor was with the NFL's New York Jets.

"Certainly we get the sense we're starting to get ourselves back to full strength," said Als head coach Marc Trestman.

The two teams have split their games this season — Montreal winning 41-10 on July 29 before Toronto claimed a 37-22 decision Aug. 14.

Toronto still has a shot — albeit a slim one — at finishing second. The Argos (8-8) must sweep their home-and-home series with Montreal and have the Hamilton Tiger-Cats (9-7) lose both of their remaining games in order to host the Ticats in the conference semifinal Nov. 14.

Man U looks to Hernandez

Young Mexican striker is stepping up while Rooney struggles to regain his form United trails Chelsea by five points for top spot in league

Javier Hernandez's strong start at Manchester United is increasing the weight of expectation on him as Wayne Rooney struggles with fitness and form.

The 22-year-old Mexico striker has scored three goals in his last two games to help earn victories over Stoke in the Premier League and Wolverhampton Wanderers in the League Cup.

But the off-season recruit could face his toughest domestic test yet against Tottenham on Saturday — the first time he has faced one of last season's top four in a league encounter.

United signed Hernandez from Mexican club Guadalajara before impressing for Mexico at the World Cup.

"It's obviously early days for him but he's made a really good impression at the club," said fellow striker Michael Owen, who is out with a hamstring injury. "He's young, sharp and a good finisher. He seems to be thriving. He's always got a smile on his face. He enjoys his football and the fans have taken to him already."

United is five points adrift of leader Chelsea, with the 18-time champions tied on 17 points with Arsenal and Manchester City.

Tottenham, which is a further two points behind in fifth, has not won at United since 1989. But playmaker Luka Modric was encouraged by the way his team scored three second-half goals in the 4-3 loss to Inter Milan in the Champions League last week.

The top five teams are all in action Saturday: Arsenal hosts West Ham, Man City goes to Wolves and Chelsea is at Blackburn.

Manchester City, which is looking to rebound from its 2-0 loss to Arsenal, will be without striker Carlos Tevez against Wolves due to a thigh injury.

Today's horoscope

For today's crossword answers and for expanded horoscopes, go to metronews.ca

♈ Aries March 21-April 20 You may not much like what you are expected to do today but do it anyway and do it with passion and commitment.

♉ Taurus April 21-May 21 Don't take it personally if a friend or work colleague disagrees with you loudly today. Usually you are pretty robust but the Sun in your opposite sign lowers your resistance to criticism. It's not worth starting a fight over.

♊ Gemini May 22-June 21 Others can make light of your achievements if they so wish but you know what you have done and how much it is worth. Chances are they're jealous that you make it all look so easy. Make them even more jealous today.

♋ Cancer June 22-July 22 Life moves in cycles and the cycle you are now in the middle of is positive in the extreme. Having said that, with values planet Venus moving retrograde you cannot afford to take anything for granted.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug.23 You may not be much in the mood for taking action but the planets indicate this is a good time to push through changes of a personal nature.

♍ Virgo Aug. 24- Sept. 22 Interesting information will come your way today, the kind of information that could be worth a lot of money. Keep what you learn to yourself for the time being. The fewer know about it the larger your profit will be.

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 The planets indicate that in a matter of days your viewpoint will improve dramatically and you won't feel so down in the dumps. The world is always as good (or as bad) as you want it to be.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 Your imagination is working overtime at the moment and some of the creative ideas you've come up with are bordering on genius. But what are you going to do with those ideas?

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20 Make the most of the good things that come your way — of which there will be plenty over the next few days. Friends are an excellent source of luck at the moment, so meet up with them.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 When you look back many years from now will you be pleased with yourself that you took so many chances? Or will you rue the opportunities you allowed to pass by?

♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20 Today's Sun-Venus union in your fellow Water sign of Scorpio encourages you to see the world from a higher perspective. Feed your mind, and your soul will soar. SALLY BROMPTON
